PREFACE.

THE Executive Committee of the "RE-UNION SOCIETY OF THE TWENTY-THIRD REGIMENT N. J. VOLUNTEERS," at a meeting held at Mount Holly, decided to have published for the benefit of the members of said society, this book, containing a history of its organization, constitution and by-laws, original muster roll of regiment, with list of casualties, speeches, and such other matters pertaining to the history of the regiment, as might prove interesting to its members, feeling that in so doing they would be instrumental in placing within the reach of all matters of importance that never perhaps could come to them except through this source, and that if any misstatements have been unconsciously embodied in this work they will be cheerfully corrected upon the presentation of trustworthy evidence of inaccuracy, in the future publications of this society. Capt. E. H. Kirkbride was selected to assist in preparing this work.

EDGEWATER PARK, December 13, 1888.

By invitation of Col. E. Burd Grubb, the survivors of the Twenty-Third Regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, were requested to meet at his residence at Edgewater Park, on Thursday, December 13th, 1888, for the purpose of once more meeting together in friendly re-union, as well as to take into consideration the propriety of forming themselves into a permanent organization.

At the station some two hundred members of the "Old Yahoos" formed into line, and, after selecting Capt. E. H. Kirkbride as commander, proceeded in light marching order to assault the beautiful home of our much loved colonel, on the banks of the Delaware; on reaching which the command was brought to a "front," and Colonel Grubb introduced by the officer in command, amid waving of hats, shouts of joy, and tears of happiness. At the command "break ranks" one grand rush was made for our old commander, which must have convinced him that for his noble conduct toward the "boys" while at the front he had engrafted himself so deeply in their affections that a quarter of a century of peace had not obliterated the love they then cherished for him. Many a tear was seen to trickle down the cheek of both Colonel and soldier as they clasped hands for the first time since the war.

The grounds were beautifully decorated and everything to make the day a pleasant one, regardless of expense, had been done; on the broad lawn east of the mansion a large tent was pitched, and in front of it was a huge "camp fire," not of "green pine," but of dry hickory cord wood, affording more grateful warmth than was accorded the regiment twenty-six years ago by the "Johnnies" at Fredericksburg. The arrangements were in charge of Joseph R. Ridgway Post, No. 21, G. A. R., of Beverly, and they deserve great credit for the manner in which they did their work. All over the grounds could be seen groups of comrades, talking over the times they had spent together on the tented field, or trying to recognize each other after time in its ceaseless revolution of twenty-five years had wrinkled the brow and silvered the hair. Some two hours were spent in this pleasant manner when we were invited to assemble in the spacious hall of the mansion, where Col. Grubb welcomed the boys with these beautiful remarks: "With all my heart I welcome you, my old comrades in arms; I ought to feel as happy as a soldier can when twenty-five years after the war I see before me, my old comrades, and the flag under which we fought, nothing is wanting to complete my happiness save the faces of those who are absent, and I trust that this is but the first of many more happy re-unions." Chaplain Abbott was then called upon and offered up the following

PRAYER :

"Almighty God, source of all good, we bow our hearts before Thee with thankfulness. Thy providences toward us have been well directed; Thy mercies generous, Thy grace abundant and free. Our preserved lives with associated blessings attest Thy great goodness. Years of peace and general prosperity have passed and we are engaged in this re union of our regiment. Many of our comrades have fallen, some at the front during the fury of battle, others have been called from the peaceful pursuits of home. Some still remain in the ranks of life and duty. God of the brave and true, let Thy blessings crown the resting place of our dead comrades, and divinely protect the widow and the orphan. Bless our nation in all her great interests, in all sections, among all classes, and may the voice of rebellion be heard no more. Bless all who are in authority, and may our rulers love God and work righteousness, that the homes of the people may continue blessed. We are to-day sharing the kind hospitality of our beloved commander whose name is an inspiration to us all. We bless Thee, Oh God! for the honor thy servant achieved on hotly contested fields of battle, weaving an imperishable record for soldierly bearing and gentlemanly kindness. We praise Thee that he is blessed with this palatial home and its beautiful surroundings. Continue Thou to smile upon him and his, making home a constant centre of happy attractions. Now grant us the help of Thy truth and grace that each one may love and serve Thee as Thou do'st require. We offer Thee our thanks, and petition for mercy in the name of Christ our adorable Redeemer, Amen."

Before proceeding with his address the colonel unfolded the "Old Yahoo" flag, which has been in his possession since the war, and the sight of which seemed to set the boys wild, as cheer upon cheer greeted it, such as can only be given by those who willingly offered their lives for its protection, and whose very threads are interwoven with the heart strings of those who had fought under its folds, and again would swear allegiance for its protection. This flag, a beautiful silk stand of National colors was presented to the regiment by Mayor Alfred Thompson, and was known throughout the army as the "Yahoo" flag, from the fact that it bore on its face the following inscription: "Twenty-third Regiment, New Jersey Yahoos," a name given the regiment one night after "taps," by General Torbert who directed one of his aids to go over and stop that noise of those Twenty-third "Yahoos."

ADDRESS BY COL. E. BURD GRUBB.

On the fourth of August, 1862, President Lincoln ordered that a draft of 300,000 volunteers be immediately called to the service of the United States to serve for nine months unless sooner discharged. The quota of New Jersey was designated as 10,478, and the regulations for the draft were announced, providing that an enrollment be immediately made of all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of 18 and 45 years, and that the draft be made on the third of September. The State authorities at once took the necessary steps to meet the requirements of this order, but a general desire being manifested by the people of the State to fill the quota by voluntary enlistment, it was announced that volunteers in lieu of drafted men would be received up to the first of September, but that the draft would positively take place at the time appointed in any township which should not by that time have furnished the full number of men required. Everywhere throughout the State the utmost enthusiasm and energy were exhibited, not only by those liable to the conscription, but by citizens of all ages and classes. For several days previous to that fixed for the draft, men poured into camp by the thousands, and by the evening of the second of September the five camps contained 10,800 volunteers. This number was subsequently reduced, by medical examination, to 10,714, being 236 more than the number called for. The camps were as follows, viz :

|------------------------|------------------------------------|
| Camp No. 1 at Trenton, | Brig. Gen. N. Halstead, Commander. |
| “ No. 2 at Beverly, | “ G. M. Robeson, “ |
| “ No. 3 at Freehold, | Lieut. Col. Height, “ |
| “ No. 4 at Newark, | Brig. Gen. Van Vorst, “ |
| “ No. 5 at Flemington, | “ Alex. Donaldson, “ |

On the morning of the third the State authorities had the satisfaction of announcing to the Adjutant-General of the United States that the quota of New Jersey was in camp, without a single drafted man. As rapidly as possible, after being received in camp the men were organized into companies and regiments, clothed, uniformed, equipped and placed under instruction, and by the 10th of October all had left for the field. The Twenty-third, commanded by Col. J. S. Cox, was mustered into the United States service on the 13th of September, 1862, and comprised 39 officers and 955 enlisted men, making a total of 994, which left the State on the 26th day of September.

Let us now look at the condition of the country at this time and the condition of the army which the Twenty-third New Jersey joined. These were what might well be called the darkest days of the war. In June, McClellan had floundered through the Chickahominy, leaving half of his magnificent army dead, wounded or prisoners ; in August, Pope had offered himself as a target for the victorious legions of Lee, and Lee made a bull's-eye of him. The veterans of the Army of the Potomac had crowded in front of the victorious rebels on northern soil, and only a few days before the Twenty-third New Jersey joined the Sixth Corps the very doubtful battle of Antietam had been fought.

The regiment after leaving New Jersey proceeded to Washington and went into camp at East Capitol Hill ; a few days after this it moved to Frederick City, Md., where it remained until the eighth of October, when it started for Bakersville to join the First New Jersey Brigade, with which it was ever after identified. Remaining at Bakersville until the 30th the regiment marched with the brigade towards New Baltimore, and while here Col. Cox was relieved from command by Col. Torbert and Lieut. Col. H.O. Ryerson of the Second New Jersey regiment was placed in charge of the Twentieth-third. On the first day of November the march was resumed, and on the ninth the Potomac was crossed and the regiment pushed on with the army in the march towards Fredericksburg. At this time, Maj. Thompson and Adj. Winans left the regiment, Lieut. Perkins of Company G being promoted to the place of the latter. On the 16th the regiment broke camp and proceeded to Catlett's Station and thence to Stafford Court House, where it remained a fortnight, drilling actively. While here, Capt. E. Burd Grubb of the Third New Jersey, then serving on the staff of Col. Torbert, was commissioned Major of the Twenty-third in place of Albert Thompson resigned, and joined the regiment on the third of December on the march to Falmouth, Va. The regiment approached the river on the afternoon of the 10th of December and lay along the bank about a quarter of a mile back of it, and on the evening of the 11th witnessed the cannonading and bombardment of the city and the heroic crossing of the river in the face of the enemy's fire by the Michigan regiment, one of the most magnificent sights in all the war. At early dawn on the 12th the Twenty-third was ordered to cross the river. The men had been aroused an hour before daylight and coffee had been made. The daylight broke with a thick fog hanging over the river and city of Fredericksburg, and as they climbed down the bank and almost groped along the slippery pontoon, doubtless the thoughts of many there were made more sombre by the death-like pall of mist that hung about them. On crossing, the regiment was formed in column of division in its place in the brigade and went out into the mist, which was so thick that one division could scarcely see the other in its front. After marching out about a quarter of a mile from the river bank the brigade halted and line of battle was formed, here they remained in line of battle, unable to see anything and hearing nothing except muffled sounds in the fog around them, not a shot, not a challenge, nothing, until between nine and ten o'clock.

In the rear of the Twenty-third was heard the trampling of horses and some of the officers upon investigation, reported a very heavy line of Union cavalry just in our rear. Some of the officers had also been in front of our line a short distance and they immediately reported to the commanding officer that there was a ravine running parallel with our line of battle, which was extremely deep and with very precipitous sides. A short time after this and very fortunately before the fog lifted, the column withdrew across the river, before however they did succeed in crossing, the lifting of the fog permitted their enemy's artillery to see them; it was here that Gen. Bayard, the commander of the cavalry, was killed by a cannon shot. About 10 o'clock the fog lifted, and being dispersed by the rays of the bright December sun, was soon rolled up, and the day was clear and bright. With the first lifting of the fog came the sounds of battle from the right and left, and when the veil of heaven was lifted from the spires of Fredericksburg, the veil of battle rose and took its place. With the chances and mischances and the management and mismanagement of that terrible battle, beyond what happened to the Twenty-third New Jersey, we have nothing to do.

When the fog lifted, and just in front of the Twenty-third, about fifty yards away and on the edge of the deep ravine, stood a small cedar tree, probably about 30 feet high, and, flying from its top was a red and white rag, which for a few moments no one paid any particular attention to. Suddenly, from the hill directly in front of the regiment and about 1200 yards away, came a puff of smoke, and the Twenty-third New Jersey felt the thrill of the first hostile shell it had ever heard. The shell struck the ground within 10 feet of the root of the cedar tree, and bounding over the heads of the men, exploded in the rear. In the next three or four minutes half a dozen other shells were fired and it became evident that the cedar tree was the range which the rebel cannoneers were using. Having received permission from Col. Torbert, Col. Ryerson crowded the regiment forward into the ravine in order to protect them from what was becoming very good artillery practice. As the regiment passed over the edge of the ravine in line of battle, two shells were fired, one of which took off Col. Ryerson's hat, without injury to its owner, and the other exploded just over the regiment and a piece of it went through the arm of private Elias Gibbs, of Company A, of Burlington. As soon as the regiment marched into the ravine it was entirely sheltered from this annoying artillery fire, which was replied to by that time by Hexamer's Battery on our side. The batteries on the left, a mile or two away, were actively engaged with the enemy's batteries on their front, and a hot fight was going on at Fredericksburg on our right. In the woods on our left was Franklin's left grand division. We remained in this ravine about two hours, when we were moved by the right flank out of the ravine to the front and ordered to lie down in a corn-stubble field, in line of battle. Directly in front of the Twenty-third some companies of the Fifteenth New Jersey regiment were deployed as skirmishers and were engaged in picket firing with the enemy's skirmishers. About opposite the left flank of the Twenty-third was a ravine running perpendicular to our line of battle and at a distance of about 200 yards from us a railroad crossed by means of an embankment and culvert, and along the bottom of this ravine and through the culvert, trickled a little rivulet.

I will now again take up Foster's narrative, which says: "At this time the battle was raging all along the line, but the brigade was not actually engaged until three o'clock, when Col. Torbert was ordered to advance one regiment, supported by a second, for the purpose of drawing the enemy from a position which it was important to occupy, two regiments of the Third brigade being at the same time placed under his orders. Col. Torbert at once ordered Col. Hatch, of the Fourth regiment, with about 300 men, to advance and take the position, simultaneously directing the left of the picket line with its reserve, under Maj. Brown, of the Fifteenth, to support the movement. These troops promptly advanced in the most handsome manner, under a severe fire of grape and canister, and then, reaching favorable ground, led by the gallant Hatch, charged the enemy's position, driving them from it with great loss, and capturing twenty-five prisoners. Rallying, however, the rebels again returned to the fray, and the position becoming critical, the Twenty-third regiment under Col. Ryerson, and two regiments of the Third brigade, were hurried forward as a support—six companies of the Twenty-third becoming immediately engaged in fighting bravely. At this moment, however, when everything was favorable to our arms, Col. Torbert was ordered to halt the remainder of the supports and fall back from the railroad, holding it by pickets only."

The charge of the Fourth down the ravine and up to the railroad was very handsome, the firing and fighting being very hot. The Twenty-third looked on for a few moments at the first fight they had ever seen, which was taking place within 200 yards of them and nearly opposite their left flank. By the time the blue coats of the Fourth regiment disappeared entirely from our view, driving the rebels back through the underbrush which fills the ravine, the order came for the Twenty-third to rise and fix bayonets, and immediately afterward the order was given, left face, column right, double quick, and away they went along the right bank of the ravine and in column of fours, directly on the railroad embankment. They had hardly risen before they were opened upon by 18 guns, and from that moment until they reached the shelter of the railroad embankment, driving the enemy helter skelter before them, they were subjected to a most terrible fire of artillery and small arms. Just before the regiment changed formation from column to line of battle, one shell burst in the ranks of Company K and wounded 10 men, and but for the fact that the aim of the rebel artillerists was a little too high, I do not believe it would have been possible for the regiment to have made the magnificent charge that it did. Just as the left of the regiment reached the embankment, the order was given, right face, left wheel, which brought the regiment by wheel up to the railroad embankment, and in making this wheel they drove out and scattered before them all the enemy who were on our side of the embankment. Just before our line of battle reached the embankment, and when they were probably within 50 yards of the plunging fire of the artillery from the hills, which was very severe, and also the rifle fire from the enemy on the embankment, which was very deadly, some confusion ensued, and in fact a slight momentary panic, the line wavered and fell-back probably 40 or 50 steps, and the right of the line crowded in towards the left so much as to force four companies down into the ravine. Almost instantly rallying they turned again, and in this turn, Capt. Jos. Ridgway of Company G, was instantly killed, and Capt. Samuel Carr of Company C, Lieut. James F. Budd of Company F, and 25 men were wounded. Very steadily and very gallantly and under a heavy fire, the six companies which were on the right of the ravine advanced to the railroad embankment which was the position which they were ordered to take. The left of the six companies rested on the culvert and the officer in command, Maj. Grubb, went there instantly to communicate with the officer in command of the Fourth regiment, Col. Hatch, his senior, who was of course then in command of the Twenty-third and the Fourth, they acting together. Col. Hatch crossed the culvert, walked through the rivulet to communicate with the commander of the Twenty-third, and as he did so several shots came through the culvert from the other side. In the conference which ensued between the two officers, Col. Hatch stated that he had just received orders from Col. Torbert to retire, as it was not desired to bring on a general engagement at that point. The two officers then agreed to withdraw their respective commands, one on one side of the ravine and one on the other. As Col. Hatch turned to go to his command across the culvert, and just as he was in the middle of it, he was shot through the thigh and fell bleeding into the water, friendly hands lifted him tenderly, though at a cost of two more wounded men, before he was beyond the reach of shot, and carried him to Falmouth where he died soon after.

By the fall of Col. Hatch the command of the detachment of the Fourth and Twenty-third developed upon the commander of the six companies of the Twenty-third, Maj. Grubb, to whom an aid of Col. Torbert immediately brought an order directing him to withdraw, and this was done along the sides of the ravine, time being taken to pour one well-aimed solid volley at close range, into two small regiments of the enemy which had crossed the railroad below the ravine, and coming up expected doubtless to capture easily those within. This volley, aided by a similar one from the Fourth Vermont, which had been moved up below the ravine, broke the enemy and caused them to retire beyond the embankment. The Twenty-third was conducted back to its position in the cornfield and remained that night on the edge of the deep ravine through which it had marched in the morning.

On the following morning the men were relieved and fell back to the shelter of the bluff, where the line was re-formed and marched to the place of bivouac. Here the command remained until the night of the 15th, when with the brigade, it re-crossed the river, and on the 16th encamped out of the reach of the rebel fire—on the 20th reaching White Oak Church and going into winter quarters. The regiment encamped in a pine woods, which was gradually cleared away for the purposes of the camp, and remained there in shelter tents, beneath which the men made themselves more comfortable by digging holes in the ground, some of which went down a distance of seven and eight feet. The regiment rapidly perfected itself in drill discipline, in brigade drills and brigade dress parades, which were here originated by Gen. Torbert, and in which the Twenty-third soon exhibited marked proficiency.

On the eighth of January, 1863, orders were given to strike camp, and the regiment being drawn up in line of battle had Gen. Burnside's celebrated battle order read to them and proceeded to join in what is known as the "mud" march. After moving up the river beyond Falmouth, the regiment went into bivouac between four and five o'clock in the afternoon, in a pine woods along side of the road. As night fell it commenced sleeting, raining and snowing, and for the next two days the regiment had a most miserable experience, and the exposure and hardships of those two days in the sleet and snow in the pine woods without tents, caused the death and disablement of many a good man. On the morning of the second day, the weather cleared up but did not get cold, and the mud on the roads seemed to be practically fathomless. The Twenty-third was detailed to do duty in pulling the pontoons back, not from the river but from the roads near the river where they were stuck in the mud, and it will appear almost incredible, but it is nevertheless true, that the average possibility of 400 men on the ropes pulling one pontoon, was to move it 100 yards an hour. In several cases it was found necessary to give the men rations of whiskey when they had by almost superhuman efforts, succeeded in pulling the pontoon to the top of a small hill.

Gen. Brooks and some of his staff attempted to cross the road where the Twenty-third was working, but the General was thrown from his horse into the mud and very narrowly escaped drowning. Lieut. Col. Milnor, a few minutes afterwards, had almost precisely a similar accident. The mud holes through which the pontoons were dragged, were in some instances eight feet deep. The men worked from early morning until after the middle of the afternoon when the task was accomplished and the regiment was marched back to its old camp at White Oak Church. It was dismal work trying to make themselves comfortable, by cleaning the snow and sleet out of the holes that had been comfortable quarters until their shelter tents were removed and they were open to the weather; however, this was soon made better and the regiment re-commenced its daily routine of drill and picketing down the Rappahannock toward the left of the army, and furnishing details for corduroying the roads, which during that time, were being made down towards the river.

At this time, on the ninth of March, E. Burd Grubb, who had been promoted to be Lieut. Col. on the 24th of December in place of Lieut. Col. George Brown resigned, was made colonel of the regiment, Col. Ryerson having been transferred to the Tenth New Jersey then doing provost-guard duty at Washington. On the 29th of April the Twenty-third regiment crossed the Rappahannock with the brigade two miles below Fredericksburg and took position in a line with the rifle-pits facing the enemy, and a little below the Bannard House, in which position it remained under occasional shell and picket fire, but without any serious engagement, until the morning of the third of May, when the Sixth Corps moved to assault the Heights of Fredericksburg. The following description is taken from Foster's narrative: "Here, says one who participated in the engagement, the men at once became exposed to a shower of missiles, and all the horrors of desperate battle were revealed to view. Soon the terrible fire of the enemy began to take effect in the ranks—Captain Severs of Company C, being badly wounded, and a number of the men more or less seriously injured. On the right, the storming party was seen steadily advancing up the Heights, and soon breaking into a run, the whole line swept over the works, and turning the guns upon the flying rebels, commanded Fredericksburg and the Heights. The enemy thus driven from his position, the Twenty-third, with the brigade, was ordered to advance, and moving rapidly through Fredericksburg, proceeded some three miles along the plank road in the direction of Chancellorsville, steadily pushing the enemy before them."

At this time the Twenty-third was in column on the right of the brigade, and led going up the road which was fringed with thick pine trees, suddenly the right of the regiment emerged from these woods. Here the road passed through wheat fields then clad in the early verdure of spring, and on the left-hand side of the road, about 500 yards from the edge of the woods, stood a farm house. Gen. Brooks, who was sitting on his horse in the middle of the road, directed Col. Grubb to place his regiment in line of battle on the left of the road with the right of the regiment resting on the road. Col. Grubb gave the order, column left, on the right by file into line, and on riding into the field where his men were coming into line, he saw directly in front of them and at a distance of probably 800 yards, a line of battle of the enemy, and in the garden of the farm house mentioned, he noticed several field pieces. The men came up rapidly into position, the colors and general guides were thrown out on the line, and just as the two wings of the regiment were deployed, the enemy opened fire with his artillery. The first shell killed the horse of the commander of the regiment, killed one of the color guard and severely wounded another, also wounding Lieut. Budd and several of the color company. Undismayed by this, the men came quickly into line and the order being given to move forward, went on a double quick. As soon as the regiment moved towards the artillery it was limbered up and driven along the road to a line of battle. The enemy moved back slowly and sullenly and disappeared in the thick pine woods leaving only its skirmishers, who then briskly engaged the skirmishers of the Second which overlapped the front of the Twenty-third. The regiment passed a hedge where it was halted, and then moving forward again, was halted and given a moment's breathing spell just at the edge of the woods into which the 'enemy had disappeared. Each man holding his piece at a "ready," they plunged forward into the underbrush and pine which was so thick that it was impossible to see into it at any distance at all. Going through this perhaps 20 yards they came suddenly upon a line of battle of the enemy standing ready for them at a distance of not over 60 yards away. It is difficult to say exactly which fired the first, the Colonel of the Twenty-third gave the order to fire the instant he saw the enemy and he thinks, and always has thought, that his men fired a fraction of a second before the rebels did. Charging instantly forward the line rushed up into the smoke of their own pieces and were met by a steady fire from the enemy, and here the battle raged with varying fortunes, the Twenty-third striving to reach the church which was full of the enemy, and enemy who were behind the church and thoroughly protected by a rifle pit, driving them back with great loss every time they approached it, this was carried on for some twenty-five minutes. The dust and smoke, shouts, cheers and groans, made a battle picture that none of those who were there will ever forget. Twice the men of the Twenty-third reached the front of the church, and some there are alive to-day who placed their hands on the lintels of the windows, but to enter the church would have been certain death. They fell back a few paces until some came up who were ready to try the desperate game. Thus the battle swayed to and fro, when finally Lieut. S. H. McCarter came to Col. Grubb and placing his mouth close to his ear, shouted to him that the left of the Twenty-third had been turned by the enemy; before the lieutenant had uttered the last word, a bullet from the church pierced his heart, and he fell dead. At the same time an officer from the right company, called to the colonel that the right had been turned. The colonel went to the left of the regiment, ascertained that the One Hundred and Twenty-first New York, which had been on the left of the Twenty-third, was not in its place, and seeing imminent danger of capture, ordered the Twenty-third to fall back. This retreat was made in as orderly a manner as possible under the circumstances. The enemy did not advance immediately, but by the time the fragments of the First New Jersey Brigade had reached a distance of 100 yards beyond the woods in their retreat, the enemy came to the edge of the woods and opened a deadly fire upon them. The colors of the Twenty-third were shot down twice; Lieut. Sibley of Company A, was shot dead while taking the colors up. Steadily and sullenly, and firing in the face of their pursuing foe, the men of the Twenty-third withdrew along the road until they reached a battery of light artillery perhaps 500 steps from where the battle had been fought, and here they halted and turned. The Second Division of the Sixth Corps came up, and the enemy, which did not approach beyond the fringe of the woods, retreated into them, being probably prevented as much as anything else from pursuing, by the fact that the woods having caught fire from the battle were burning fiercely in their rear. "On the following morning, the fourth, we fell back, with batteries in line of battle and infantry in support, ready for the coming fight. All day we lay here, our part of the line not being attacked until late in the afternoon, when a fierce assault was made, with which, however, we had nothing to do. In this assault, the enemy suffered terribly from our guns, his line seeming to melt away before their discharges until nothing was left. Just before dark, one company of each regiment was ordered to be deployed as skirmishers and thrown out one hundred yards in advance of the line. This detail was intended to be sacrificed, if necessary, to the safety of the corps, for, just after dark, orders to begin the retreat were given. The Twenty-third was among the regiments honored with this detail as rear-guard. After the rest of the corps had proceeded the required distance, we saw the artillery which had been stationed with us, limber up and go to the rear at a round trot, disappearing presently from view. At length, our orders came, and at a double-quick we moved from the field. Once we were halted, deployed, and preparations made for a combat in the dark, but the rebels gave up the pursuit, being probably fearful of an ambuscade, when our retreat was resumed and continued until we arrived in the vicinity of United States Ford. Here the enemy came up with us, and during the remainder of the night maintained a desultory fire, but without any serious effect. So exhausted were the men on their arrival at the ford that they threw themselves on the ground without shelter or blankets and were almost immediately asleep.

Just at dawn on the fifth we crossed the river, and about eight o'clock halted for rest, still in full view of the enemy, who soon opened fire, continuing it until noon—happily without inflicting any damage. Late in the afternoon we received orders to return to the river bank to prevent the capture or burning of the pontoon boats, which, though swung to our side, it was impossible to remove from the water, owing to the sharp pursuit of the enemy. Soon after taking position, rain began to fall, continuing during the entire night, and gradually increasing in volume until it seemed a very deluge. The men of course suffered the greatest discomfort, but with the morning the storm ceased, and a regiment appearing to relieve us, we marched to our starting point, whence on the following day we proceeded to White Oak Church, in the vicinity of which we encamped, and for a brief season were permitted to rest.

The loss of the Twenty-third in this action was, officers, four killed and seven wounded; enlisted men, 20 killed, 57 wounded and 31 missing; a greater loss than that of any regiment in the brigade except the Fifteenth.

On the last day of May, the regiment went out for a final tour of picket duty, returning to camp on the third of June. All thought was now turned homeward and we were hourly in expectation of receiving orders from Washington, the term of service of the regiment expiring on the 13th of June. But hardly had we returned from picket, when it was rumored that we were again to be sent across the Rappahannock, at first this was deemed incredible, but the inevitable "three days cooked rations" were prepared and orders came to march at daylight the following day.

"The regiment then proceeded to the banks of the river, where it remained until the following day, when it crossed, and under cover of the ensuing night threw up a breastwork extending along the entire front of our position in front of the city and Heights of Fredericksburg. The enemy, immediately upon discovering us, opened fire, but without inflicting any loss. Each day still further strengthened our works, and a couple of sandbag batteries for the mounting of some heavy guns, were fast approaching completion, when finally orders came for our return to Beverly, to be mustered out. Accordingly we re-crossed the Rappahannock, and marched directly to Falmouth, going thence by rail to Belle Plain Landing, and from that point by steamer to Washington. In due time Beverly was reached amid general acclamations, and the men separated on furlough, awaiting the completion of the preparations for muster-out."

"But the Twenty-third was to see further service before it was finally disbanded. Late in June the country was startled by the news of Lee's advance into Pennsylvania, and the supposed danger of Harrisburg, the Capital of the State. Then a few days later came the stirring proclamation of Gov. Parker, appealing to the people and regiments not yet disbanded or in process of formation, to hasten to the aid of a sister State. When this appeal was issued, less than half of the members of the Twenty-third were in camp, but Col. Grubb promptly ordered the "assembly" and asked all who would follow him to step two paces to the front. Not a man hesitated. Transportation was at once telegraphed for, but it was late in the day before it was furnished. In the dusk of the evening the regiment landed at Walnut street wharf in Philadelphia, and preceded by a band, marched through the crowded streets, greeted at every step by peals of cheers, to the Harrisburg depot, whence it being impossible to procure transportation, it proceeded to the corner of Twenty-seventh and Market streets, where it was quartered for the night. On the following morning, after some delay and a great deal of trouble, Col. Grubb succeeded in procuring a train of coal cars in which the men were stowed as comfortably as possible, and so carried to Harrisburg, now supposed to be closely menaced by the rebels. Reaching the city, however, the men who had been so eager to get on, found no excitement whatever, much to their surprise. The Twenty-third was the first regimental organization to reach the city, but strangely enough, it was coolly rather than enthusiastically received by the people whom it had made such haste to defend. Soon after arriving, the regiment was taken out to the river front and set at work in throwing up rifle-pits to prevent the passage of the river, which at this time was very shallow. Here the men worked steadily, from the colonel down, but before the labor was completed, orders were received directing the return of the regiment to Beverly, and accordingly, the command, without regret, quitted the inhospitable capital. Reaching Beverly, it remained until the 27th of June, when it was finally dissolved, and the men who had fought and suffered in its ranks, went their several ways.

New Jersey may well be proud of the record of the gallant regiment whose services are here but imperfectly narrated. In every action in which it was called upon to take part, it exhibited distinguished gallantry, and in the ranks, sadly thinned by the casualties of the field, were soldiers whose names deserve to be written side by side with the best and noblest of the Republic. Many of the officers and men again, in other organizations, met the nation's foe, and fought through the war, some attaining high and deserved promotion. The Thirty-seventh New Jersey was largely composed of members of the Twenty-third, the Fortieth also drew many of its members from the same noble organization. The Third Cavalry took many more, while numbers still re-enlisted in the older regiments and earned fresh distinction on later fields."

During the delivery of his address the Colonel was frequently interrupted by bursts of applause or "you're right," "I saw that myself," and other such expressions, showing the deep interest all felt in its delivery. After this all were invited to partake of a splendid collation, not of "hard tack" and bean soup such as we had at the "front," but a "set out" such as only caterer Dubell knows how to get up, and to which all did ample justice. On re-assembling around the "camp fire," we were treated to a beautiful display of fire works by daylight, which afforded much amusement to all, until called to order by the colonel for the purpose of forming a permanent organization.

On motion a committee consisting of Captains Kirkbride, Risdon and Burnett were appointed to name the officers of the organization, who made the following report :

For President, Col. E. Burd Grubb.

" Vice Presidents, Co. A, Serj. Alfred Inglin ; Co. B, Lieut. S. E. Branin ; Co. C, Capt. Samuel Carr ; Co. D, Serj. A. I. Herbert ; Co. E, Capt. A. W. Grobler ; Co. F, Capt. E. H. Kirkbride ; Co. G, Capt. H. C. Risdon ; Co. H, Capt. D. S. Root ; Co. I, Serj. I. E. Shivers ; Co. K, Corp. Thos. Blackmann.

" Secretary, Corp. E. K. Donaldson.

" Treasurer, W. B. E. Miller.

The report of the committee was adopted. On motion, Col. Grubb was appointed a committee of one to get up an appropriate badge. On motion, Capts. Kirkbride, Risdon and Burnett were appointed a committee to draft a Constitution and set of By-Laws for the government of the organization. At the suggestion of the President a motion was made and adopted that the next meeting be held at his residence on the third day of May, 1889. After which we adjourned to the mansion and listened to interesting speeches made by Col. Grubb, Lieut. Col. Brown, Captains Burnett, Kirkbride, Miller, and Corp. Donaldson. On motion, Corp. Donaldson was selected orator for the next re-union. After which the meeting adjourned with loud praises on every lip for our splendid entertainment, and best wishes for the future happiness and prosperity of our beloved colonel, and a fervent prayer that the Great God that had brought us safely home from the war, and permitted us to meet in friendly re-union, will guard, guide and protect for all future generations the country and flag we all love so well.

Too much praise cannot be given to Serj. I. E. Shivers and John P. Jones, of Company I, for the interest they took in bringing about this happy Re-union.

EDGEWATER PARK, May 3d, 1889.

Pursuant to a resolution adopted at a meeting of the survivors of the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, held at the residence of Col. E. Burd Grubb, at Edgewater Park, December 13th, 1888, fixing the third of May of each year as the time for the Re-unions, about one hundred and fifty of the members of the regiment met, and on being called to order by the president, Col. Grubb, Corporal E. K. Donaldson led in prayer. The records of the proceedings of our Re-union held December 13th, 1888, as kept by the secretary and Capt. Kirkbride, was read, and adopted as the minutes of our first Re-union.

Col. Grubb then read over his address delivered on the 13th of December, that the members could make such corrections as might be needed.

After the reading of the address, one of the most pleasing incidents of the day occurred, that of presenting to the gaze of the boys for the first time since the war, the State colors of the regiment, which had but recently come into possession of the colonel through a Post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Atlantic City.

This flag was presented to the regiment by the Sunday-schools of Burlington County, as the following from the Burlington Gazette of April, 1863, will show :

“ REGIMENTAL COLORS.

“ In order that each school in the county may have a clear understanding of this voluntary testimonial of our Burlington County Regiment, we have annexed the following statement, and shall endeavor to have a copy delivered to each school, with a request that they take action in the matter at the earliest convenient time.

“ FRANKLIN FERGUSON,

“ Burlington, N. J.”

“ REGIMENTAL FLAG PRESENTATION.

“ Arrangements are now being made, by which the Sunday-school children of Burlington County will present to the (Burlington County) that is, the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers a splendid stand of regimental colors, showing the desire that is in their hearts that this United Republic should be handed down to them, as it was to their fathers, untrammelled by the traitor's hand. It is desired that every school in the county will participate in the offering, and make such arrangements as that each child may contribute, although it may be but the ‘ widow's mite.’ Any person desiring to aid in this movement will have an opportunity of so doing, and any contributions they may desire to make, if left with Franklin Ferguson, will be placed to the credit of any designated school. All schools are requested to participate. The colors are ordered, and will be of rich blue silk, 6 by 6½ feet. On the front an oil painting of the coat-of-arms of New Jersey, with motto and inscription, ‘ Presented by the Sunday-school Army of Burlington County to the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.’ On the reverse the United States coat-of-arms encircled by ‘ Fredericksburg,’ and the ‘ Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers ’ on the ribbon in the eagle's grasp ; to be executed in Messrs. Horstman & Son's artistic style. A union concert is proposed to be given in Burlington about the 11th of March in aid of this patriotic memorial to our brave boys. This regiment has had no regimental colors. Any desired information will be given by Franklin Ferguson, Burlington, N. J.”—Dollar Newspaper, February 28th.

“ REGIMENTAL COLORS FOR THE TWENTY-THIRD.

“ At a meeting of the superintendents and those representing the several Sunday-schools of this city, it was thought advisable (for want of time to arrange a creditable concert) to change the programme, and take a voluntary offering from each school, of which the superintendent will give due notice.

"The response to the proposition from other parts of the county has been, thus far, very satisfactory. As almost every school in the county is represented, either by a pastor, superintendent, teacher or scholar in the Twenty-third Regiment, we hope that every school will be represented in this patriotic testimonial. Individual contributions are invited."—Dollar Newspaper, March 7th.

"HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-THIRD REGT. N. J. VOLS.

"F. FERGUSON, ESQ.

"Dear Sir: Your favor of March 27th reached me on the first inst., but suffering from a severe indisposition I was unable to answer it. I can truly assure you it was a great disappointment to us all, on learning that we were to be deprived of the pleasure of a visit from you and your daughter, which we had so much counted upon. I sent to Falmouth our horse and cart for your baggage, and a horse for your use.

"I received the flag (complete) yesterday afternoon, and have shown it to a few of our officers. It has been very much admired, and I can say the Twenty-third has the handsomest stand of colors in this brigade. I regret exceedingly that you could not get here to present the flag to the regiment yourself.* I have been unable to send for it before. Lieut. Col. Grubb has kindly consented to present it to the regiment. I am still quite weak, and unable to present it myself, as I had intended, but as I was desirous that the regiment should have it at once, requested him to do it. With many thanks to you and the Sunday-school Army, on behalf of the regiment, for such a beautiful present, with the assurance to you and them that the Twenty-third will render a good account of themselves, and take good care of so valuable a charge,

"I am very truly yours, etc.,

"F. W. MILNOR,

"Major Twenty-third Regt. N. J. Vols."

* "On the morning of our arrival in Washington an order was issued by Maj. Gen. Hooker, prohibiting civilians visiting the Army of the Potomac. We therefore so informed the major, and returned to our homes in a few days."

"CAMP OF THE TWENTY-THIRD REGT. N. J. VOLS.

"Near White Oak Church, Va., April 20th, 1863.

"Mr. Editor: It is with no ordinary feeling that I sit down to chronicle a very pleasant affair that occurred at our camp day before yesterday, I allude to the presentation of the State colors gotten up for us under your auspices. It was an occasion that will long be remembered by us, not only because the banner was beautiful, not only on account of the monitions to duty it breathed, not only the past glories and honored memories it symbolized, though these things, in all their force, exerted their due influence, but as well that it spoke to our hearts of home, of warm sympathies and of loved ones we left in dear old Jersey.

"The flag was presented on behalf of the donors by our honored colonel, who, although not an orator, in the strict rendition of the term, gave us an address full of life, fire and energy, characteristic of the man. He spoke to us of the cause that brought this fine regiment into the service; of our duty to our country, and of his confidence that, even as we had not swerved from that duty in the past, he doubted not, if it was our fortune to again front the enemy on the field of battle in defence of the principles so dear to the hearts of all who wish well to the republic, the Twenty-third New Jersey will not disappoint the expectations of its friends. He spoke of the many kindly memories reproduced, of the prosperity and grandeur that characterized our common country, of the feelings of pride that surcharge our hearts as we remember the gallant deeds that make brilliant the pages of our history. He then turned to the other side, and his thoughts took another channel. There, emblazoned on its beautiful blue field, was the arms of old Jersey, and as we listened, our better feelings were excited, our hearts softened, and the sweet vision of home, and the tender associations thronged upon our minds. Oh! how doubly dear to us poor exiles from the companionship and bright smiles of welcome from our wives and sweethearts was this remembrance from home! The flushed faces and filmy eyes of very many in the living walls that enclosed the precious gift, gave evidence that the home feeling was yet active in our hearts. Could the dear children, and 'those of older growth,' who sent this token of their care, have appreciated the feelings the arrival of their beautiful present awakened, they would have felt amply compensated for their trouble and outlay.

"After Col. Grubb had concluded his remarks, he called from the color guard Corporal William B. Price, of Burlington stock, and gave him the flag in charge, saying, 'I appoint you lance sergeant, and do not say to you protect this color with your life, for that is nothing more than any of these (pointing to the regiment formed in hollow square) would do, but I do say, protect it as your honor, for to any here I trust honor is dearer than life.' The fine band of our brigade now played the Star Spangled Banner, and then three cheers were proposed for the 'Sunday-school Army of Burlington County,' and given with a will; then three for our popular colonel; three for the 'First New Jersey Brigade;' three for the best brigadier in the service, Gen. A. T. A. Torbert; then by an outsider, three for the Chief of the Yahoos (Col. Grubb); then three for old Jersey. At intervals between the cheers the band gave us several airs, patriotic and others; the adjutant also read an order appointing Lieut. Col. Grubb our colonel. This gives universal satisfaction in the regiment. Rarely has any man so completely centred the respect and goodwill of so large a regiment as has Col. E. Burd Grubb. In the evening the officers assembled at the colonel's quarters and partook of some refreshments he had provided for the occasion. Songs, toasts, and the interchange of sentiment soon wore away the evening, and about 12 o'clock all retired to their quarters, and the festive scenes only live in the memory of the kindly feelings they engendered.

"Truly yours,

"Could you have been here on the occasion of the presenting of that beautiful flag, and heard the cheering, you would not have doubted but that every one of us were loyal.

"When I looked on that flag, that symbol of liberty, which cost our forefathers so much precious blood, and thought for a moment from whose hands it came to us, it made me shed tears of joy. God bless the noble Sunday-school Army! Proud am I to think that I am connected with a branch of it. That flag that the Sunday-schools of our county have presented to us as a token of their friendship for us will be carried to our graves on the battle-field to save our country if it be the will of Divine Providence."

"Several schools are preparing their contributions, and when we have heard from all the different schools (say by the first of June), we will publish a full report and send a copy to each contributor. We feel to hope that all the schools in the county will take a lively interest in the flag which has given so much satisfaction to our gallant Twenty-third."—Burlington Gazette, April, 1863.

Col. Grubb then stated that both the regimental flags were in his possession and his property, and that he prized them as the greatest of his earthly possessions, being, he said, perhaps the only instance on record of the war, that after the lapse of a quarter of a century the commanding officer of a regiment could say he possessed both stands of colors which his "boys" had fought so gallantly under.

The Committee on Constitution and By-laws appointed at the last meeting made the following report, which on motion was adopted:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. This Association shall be known by the name and title of the Re-union Society of the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and shall include every officer and enlisted man who has at any time served with honor in the regiment, and been honorably discharged therefrom, who shall have given his assent to the Constitution and By-laws of the society, and paid his initiation fee.

SECTION 2. The objects of the society shall be to keep alive a spirit of patriotism; to imbue our posterity with a love of country, which shall at all times rise paramount to the ties of party; to revive and strengthen the ties of fraternal fellowship and sympathy formed by companionship in the regiment; to recall to mind the trials we had to encounter, as well as the many amusing incidents that went to make up the history of our late struggle; to perpetuate the names and fame of those who have fallen either on the field of battle or in the line of duty, and to collect and preserve for our children a record of the battles, marches, campaigns and skirmishes which the regiment passed through so honorably.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The officers of the society shall consist of a President, one Vice-president from each company, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, a Chaplain, and an Executive Committee of five.

SECTION 2. These officers shall be elected annually at the Reunion of the regiment, and hold their respective offices one year, or until their successors are chosen. They shall be elected by ballot, by a majority of all the members present, except the Vice-presidents, who shall be chosen by the members of each company.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The annual meeting of the society shall be held on the third of May of each year, except when that date comes on Sunday, in which event the annual meeting shall be held on the fourth.

SECTION 2. Ten members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

ARTICLE IV.

This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any annual meeting, provided due notice of the change contemplated shall be given at the previous meeting.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I. Every officer and soldier of the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers who was honorably discharged therefrom, desiring to become a member of this society, shall, upon giving his assent to the Constitution and By-laws, pay to the Treasurer the sum of one dollar as an initiation fee, and each year thereafter the sum of one dollar for annual dues, and shall thereupon be entitled to a copy of the proceedings of the society when published, free of charge, and to all the other privileges of members. No member in arrears for dues shall be entitled to a vote in the society.

ARTICLE 2. The President shall preside at all meetings of the society, sign all drafts on the Treasurer for the payment of money, when so ordered by the society or the Executive Committee, and appoint all committees not otherwise provided by the society. In the absence of the President his duties shall be performed by one of the Vice-presidents, and in the absence of both President and Vice-president a President pro tempore, with like power, may be chosen.

ARTICLE 3. The Corresponding Secretary shall, at the expense of the society, notify the members of the time and place of holding the annual meeting, by public notice at least one month before the time fixed for the said annual meeting; and shall also conduct all correspondence for the society.

ARTICLE 4. The Recording Secretary shall attend all meetings of the society or Executive Committee, and record all their proceedings in a book provided for that purpose, and preserve the books and papers belonging to the same. He shall draw upon the Treasurer for such money as may be ordered by the society or the Executive Committee, and perform such other duties as may be required of him, and at the expiration of his term of office deliver all books and papers belonging to the society in his possession to his successor in office.

ARTICLE 5. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all moneys due the society, and pay the same out upon an order of the Recording Secretary, countersigned by the President, and at each annual meeting present a report of the receipts and expenditures, and at the expiration of his term of office deliver all moneys, books and papers belonging to the society to his successor in office.

ARTICLE 6. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to make all necessary arrangements for the annual meeting of the society ; also to audit the accounts of the Secretary and Treasurer, and perform such other duties as the society may require of them.

ARTICLE 7. The order of business at the annual meetings shall be as follows : Meeting called to order—Prayer by Chaplain—Reading of minutes—Collection of dues—Reading of communications—Addresses—Reports of committees—Unfinished business, and new business.

ARTICLE 8. These By-laws may be amended, altered or repealed by a vote of two thirds of the members present at any meeting.

The society then proceeded to an election of officers under the Constitution with the following result :

President, Col. E. Burd Grubb. Vice-presidents : Co. A, Sergt. Alfred Inglin ; Co. B, Lieut. S. E. Branin ; Co. C, Capt. Samuel Carr ; Co. D, Sergt. A. I. Herbert ; Co. E, Capt. A. W. Grobler ; Co. F, Capt. E. H. Kirkbride ; Co. G, Capt. Henry C. Risdon ; Co. H, Capt. D. S. Root ; Co. I, Sergt. I. E. Shivers ; Co. K, Corporal Thomas Blackman. Recording Secretary, Corporal E. K. Donaldson. Corresponding Secretary, B. P. Bussom. Treasurer, W. B. E. Miller. Chaplain, Rev. William T. Abbott. Executive Committee, J. Ridgway English, Frank S. Gaskill, I. E. Shivers, B. S. Shreve and John P. Jones.

In the absence of the Treasurer Frank S. Gaskill was chosen to act temporarily. Corporal E. K. Donaldson gave notice of his intention to so amend the Constitution at our next Re-union as to admit to membership the son or sons of the members of the society. On motion, Chaplain W. T. Abbott was selected as the orator of our next meeting.

The orator of the day, Corporal E. K. Donaldson, then delivered the following

ADDRESS :

We gather together to-day, my comrades, under the hospitable roof of our old leader, some of us after a separation of twenty-six years, to recall the old memories of camp and march and battle, and to renew the friendships born in adversity and sacrifice—friendships which a generation of time has not sufficed to destroy or even to weaken. This sentiment, I am sure, is borne out by the experience of that never-to-be-forgotten re-union of the Twenty-third New Jersey on this spot in last December, when, for the first time since he led us in the memorable campaign of '62 and '3 we gathered around our gallant colonel, whom we had never ceased to love and feel proud of, during all the years of separation since we were mustered out of the service in June, '63.

What a pleasure it was to look into the faces and grasp the hands of old companions in trial, and to be assured, by the heartiness of their greetings, that all the experiences and vicissitudes of life since those days of war had not weakened the friendships begotten and developed amidst the trials and sufferings and joys, too, of army life. And this pleasure we renew to-day, through the munificence of our honored colonel, whom, in your name, I profoundly thank for his noble-hearted generosity in inviting us to his beautiful home.

I account it no small honor, my comrades, that you have selected me to speak on this occasion, and I only regret that your choice did not fall on some one who has the tongue of an orator, and who might suitably speak to your hearts and re kindle therein the fires of patriotic enthusiasm, and help you to live over again, to-day, in memory and feeling, the scenes of which this occasion naturally reminds us. When I turn back, in my thoughts, to those early days when most of us were boys full of hope and courage, going forth from our homes with a great purpose in our hearts to stand by the dear flag or fall by it, there comes up before my vision a scene which none of us will ever forget, when in front of the old barracks at Beverly, we stood together as a regiment and were mustered into the service of the United States. It was one of those grand, beautiful days of early autumn, when we stood in the full radiance of an unclouded sky and sealed our allegiance to the stars and stripes; and I am sure that your memories are young enough yet to recall an incident that was at once beautiful, poetic and inspiring. Just as the muster was about over, we looked up, and right over us we saw an American eagle, with wings outspread, circling again and again around and about us as if deeply interested in the ceremonies which linked ourselves to the fate of the country of which he was a fitting emblem.

In spite of our civilization and culture there abides in the human soul a sense which is, perhaps improperly, called superstition, but which leads us to hail certain sights as good omens; and so, I can never recall that incident without a great deal of satisfaction; as though it might have been providentially directed as a sign of the approval with which Heaven looked down, that day, upon the spectacle of ten hundred young men and boys laying their lives upon the altar of devotion to their country.

Soon after this happened the battle of Antietam; then came the call for reinforcements, and then our Beverly picnic was over, and one morning in September we steamed out from the wharf, where the farewells waved, and doubtless many a tear was shed until the steamer had borne the Twenty-third out of sight.

It is not necessary to remind you of the scene at the Cooper refreshment saloon in Philadelphia. That was Philadelphia's spirit of patriotic appreciation of the soldier's devotion, materialized in generous and delightful provision for a soldier's ever-present appetite. Attractive tables abundantly laden; draped flags; patriotic mottoes; the cheery faces and hearty manner of benevolent men; and the beaming and encouraging countenances and tender attentions of good, true women, were an inspiration to us then, and are among our sweetest memories now.

And this, boys, ended the romance. That night true soldier-life began, and we were loaded in box cars and shipped, with less provision for comfort than is now made for cattle in transportation, to the capital.

Our experience at Capitol Hill was short, yet quite long enough, and one morning, after wiping up the sidewalks of the capital all night, we were again shipped—(I will not say transported—perhaps loaded aboard the cars would be more accurate)—for Frederick City. The journey occupied, if my memory serves me, the best part of two days. When we started from Washington we were in box cars; when we got into Frederick we were in skeleton cars: when we started there were no windows in the cars; when we arrived, there was nothing but windows; and the frames on wheels were an eloquent protest against insufficient ventilation; and Uncle Sam certainly respected our protest, for, from this time until the 27th day of the following June we never again had occasion to ask for more ventilation. We had all we wanted. We can, all of us, recall the many times when a box car would have been Heaven to us; but no box car was given us, and between us and the winds of heaven, and its storms, too, no obstacle more formidable than a strip of petticoat muslin was ever interposed.

We commenced our shelter-tent campaign on the edge of Frederick City, where we spent probably a week or ten days feasting on the milk and pies with which that beautiful country abounded, and then started on our first march to Bakersville. It was new business to us, boys, and those knapsacks that had become plethoric in the luxurious life of a home camp, began to multiply their weight by the hours through which we tramped in the hot sunshine of that September day. I well remember piling up on the roadside, some good flannel underclothing, a fine shoebrush and other articles which, under the hallucination of aching calves and shoulders, I imagined I could well do without; but evidently we did not all think alike, or feel alike, because the articles had scarcely touched the ground before they were added to the wardrobes of men who had cooler judgments as well as stouter limbs than myself. By the time we had reached Bakersville, and I had got broken in, I was ready to carry my extra flannels; but alas! I never again had the opportunity, and I afterward paid the penalty of my rashness by wearing Uncle Sam's skin-scratching underwear.

Arrived at Bakersville we at once became a part of the Army of the Potomac, and what an inadequate idea some of us had of that great army may be illustrated by my own greenness, which I am really ashamed to confess; but as this is history the only thing to do is to own the fact.

The first night we were in camp I thought I would go out and look at the Army of the Potomac.

My idea was that it was gathered into one grand mass, somewhat on the order of the camp of ancient Israel about the tabernacle; and I thought it would be a handsome sight at night when all the tents were illuminated. Well, I went out and looked, first one way and then another, but I couldn't find the army. Then I found a veteran belonging to the brigade, and said to him, "Where is the Army of the Potomac?" "The Army of the Potomac?" he said in surprise; "Why, the Army of the Potomac is scattered for more than twenty miles about here." Well, I believe I got my first definite idea, then, of what an army was.

Not many days after our arrival at Bakersville, the Army of the Potomac moved, and we, of course, moved with it; and I do not know whether I am now the more "moved" to sigh or to laugh when I think of that first day's march. I wonder if any of you forget it?

We were on the left of the brigade and of course brought up the rear. Those old vet's on the right thought they would work the green regiment that had come marching into camp at Bakersville singing "We'll hang Jeff Davis to a sour apple-tree, as we go marching along:"—and they did work us. I tell you, boys, we didn't sing much that day. Indeed, that day's march spoiled our music permanently. Col. Grubb has already told us how he was sent out toward evening to hunt us up, and found the regiment about four miles long—(strung all along the road.) It was a sort of a go-as-you-please walking match between us and the rear-guard; and I don't know which of the two were the more devilled that day, they or we; I think they were. The road wasn't wide enough for us, and we spread all over the fields on either side, as wild as jack rabbits; and the poor rear-guards were chasing us back and forth, and we were dodging them, and they swearing and cursing and fuming and worn out, and we mad and stubborn and tantalizing—I never saw such a used-up set of men as those rear-guards; and although hardened to service, I'll bet they got to camp that night more tired than ourselves.

Well, we marched better the next day, and the next, and so on, until our turn came to lead the brigade, by which time we were in good marching trim, and warmed to our work, and gave those old vet's on the left all they wanted to do to keep up with us; and tradition hath it that the verdict of those old regiments was that the Twenty-third was "no slouch."

The first real hardship we encountered was at the termination of that beautiful Indian summer weather during the first week in November, when, one night we stopped under a leaden sky to go into camp at White Plains, in Virginia. It had been a toilsome all-day march, and many of the boys, too tired to stretch their shelters, lay down in their blankets under the open sky. That night we had our first snow-storm, and the next day was as cold as Greenland and we were as hungry as wolves. Here we experienced our first pinch of hunger; rations were short, and we never fairly caught up again until we went into winter-quarters at White Oak Church, about the 20th of December.

I remember going out with a comrade to where the brigade butchers had been killing beef, where we found a couple of plucks which we eagerly seized upon as great spoils, and then picked off what little fat we could find sticking to the paunches, until our finger-ends were nearly frozen, to fry the plucks with; then we came back to camp, proudly displaying our treasure, and proceeded to prepare our banquet.

About this time followed a change of commanders, a change of base, and the forced march to Stafford Court House. We had scarcely made camp here when a rain-storm came on, lasting several dismal days. When, at last, the sun came out one afternoon, and some of us peeped out of our shelters to see his welcome rays, we saw, squatting near a puddle in front of his tent, Uncle Dick Jordan, whom many of you well remember, and singing out, in as close imitation of the frog as possible, "Peek, peek! Knee-deep! Peek, peek! Knee-deep!" We concluded the storm must be at an end, and the sign did not fail.

It was while we were lying at Stafford Court House, I believe, that that famous ration of molasses was issued to us which has become historic. There can be no reasonable doubt that Uncle Sam had become anxious lest we were living too high, and required a generous dose of physic, and knowing the soldier's repugnance to medicine, had conspired with the surgeon and quartermaster to administer jalap to the regiment in molasses as a convenient and attractive vehicle.

Another memorable event at Stafford was the issue of our first ration of whiskey. To a good many it was just enough to be tantalizing, and it is remarkable how the fumes stimulated the ingenuity of some of the fellows, and how quickly they found themselves in the peddling business;—hard tack for whiskey; pork for whiskey; sugar for whiskey.

Some of the more persevering merchants drove quite a trade, and when night came they turned in with the delightful sense of several jiggers aboard. The next morning found them with depleted haversacks, but with delightful recollections. I make no comments, I simply state the facts. I think it was at Stafford that we had our first flour, and were initiated into the fine art of making slap-jacks. Oh! don't your mouths water when you think of them? White as saffron; tender as leather, and dripping with gravy made of fried pork fat, flour and water, and seasoned to the taste. And then the skill which we soon acquired in turning them in the pan was just marvelous. Of course we had no yeast to raise them, and so we had to depend upon a process of æration; consequently the higher we could flap them in the air the lighter they would be; and no juggler could excel that sudden twist of the wrist that would send the cake flying up in the air, making a complete somersault and coming down—flap—in the pan on the other side. I suppose most of you have forgotten how, after we had gone into winter-quarters, and had log sides and chimneys to our tents, a few of us more skillful cooks used to hold the pan in the fire-place, flap the cake up the chimney, skip outside the tent and catch it in the pan as it came down. I had almost forgotten this part myself, but am glad I just thought of it.

It was at Stafford Court House too, that we learned the art of making rice-fritters. The recipe was quite simple, but the dish was certainly very fine. Hard tack, boiled tender and crumbled up; boiled rice stirred into the batter, then fried in a pan and eaten with sugar or some of "those molasses." Why, I am sure, if we had remained much longer at Stafford we would have become a regiment of chefs. I shouldn't wonder if Vanderbilt's ten-thousand-dollar chef learned his art at Stafford Court House.

From Stafford we moved, in early December, to Devil's Hole, where we lay on that bleak barren hillside for a week, and then in the grey dawn of one cold morning we struck tents after a hurried breakfast and started on the famous Fredericksburg campaign. I suppose the booming of those guns that morning, growing louder and nearer the longer we marched, rings in the ears of your memory yet I well remember, when we were halted to rest, and to load our pieces, concluding that we were going into business now, I piled up all my letters in a heap and burned them up. A comrade with me had a store of love-letters, and I urged him to destroy them. At first he concluded he would; then—and you can't blame him—he changed his mind, put them back into his knapsack, and there they remained, perfectly secure, until some Johnny Reb picked up his knapsack on that lost field of Fredericksburg, and doubtless entertained his messmates with the sweetness that was intended for only one good Union Soldier.

The events of the Fredericksburg campaign have been vividly related by our colonel already; and yet it is difficult to pass by a scene that was of so much moment to us then, and his, doubtless, had a permanent influence on our characters.

We left Devil's Hole on Wednesday, took position behind Hexamer's battery on the north side of the river, bivouacked there that night, and on Friday morning crossed the pontoon bridge and took position just the other side of the river, where we advanced across the field and down into a ravine.

I well remember how, when we came to the edge of the creek, the line halted, each man looking for stepping-stones on which to cross over dry shod, Col. Ryerson vainly shouting "Forward!"

While the line thus wavered, a shell whizzed over us and seemed uncomfortably close, and without the delay of another second, stepping-stones were at a discount and the line went forward, knee-deep through the cold stream with a prompt style that must have filled Col. Ryerson's heart with admiration. Every man was aiming now for the opposite bank, and in less time than it takes to tell it, we were under its hospitable shelter.

We had never heard the screech of a shell before, you know, and we thought nothing could exceed it until one fellow in Co. "A" was hit, and I believe he beat the shell at screeching; but he was fairly entitled to the privilege, for, to his honor be it said, he gave the first "Yahoo" blood to his country.

I remember while we lay there under fire, trying to console myself with the thought that I did not feel at all afraid, but that the dreadful noise made me nervous; but I remember now, that when our own battery opened, right behind us, with deafening din, I quite enjoyed the racket. Somehow my nerves were soothed by that noise.

That night (Thursday) we lay all night in the ravine, and on Friday morning moved forward and formed a line of battle, relieving the Fifteenth New Jersey, and there remained, supporting our pickets all that day and night. The next morning (Saturday) we were relieved, changed our position and lay in line of battle behind a knoll, the enemy's shells skipping over our heads and quenching their destructive desires in the river in our rear.

I remember while we lay here in the afternoon, near the time when we became engaged, Col. Ryerson called for a vidette to advance a few yards in front of the line. The man started with his gun, and the colonel called to him, "Leave your gun;" and a good Dutchman in our company (G) sang out, "Pring pack dot mush-tick." (I might add that this same Dutchman was slightly wounded at Salem Church, but wanted to remain at the front, and went to the rear for treatment only when the captain insisted upon it; but it wasn't long before he came back again with a chicken which he had taken prisoner.)

In a few moments after the vidette had gone out the sharp crack of rifles grew nearer and more constant in our front; seven distinct beats on a bass drum; the colonel's prompt, decisive tones, "Attention! Left face! Forward!" and the Twenty-third started in on the business for which they had enlisted a few months before. That was no sudden dash, my comrades! There was no fire of enthusiasm to carry us forward; all the enthusiasm had oozed out of us while we lay for two days under fire; and the cold ground and damp nights had taken all the fire out of our blood. But we had been facing the responsibility and were nerved up to hard duty ; and I believe not a man hesitated when the order came. In a moment's time knapsacks were slung, the men were in line, marching by the left flank, on quick time and with bent forms. Not a voice was heard ; duty was before us ; death was before us, and every man felt the awful pressure of a solemn and dreadful reality.

We followed the trail along the edge of that wooded ravine until we turned the curve which no one can ever forget, and Oh, God ! how terrible !

To ears untrained to the din of battle it sounded as if the earth were bursting asunder. The air seemed filled with exploding missiles (as indeed it was), ringing, crashing, blasting, filling the soul with an awful sense of destruction. OH, THAT HELL OF FIRE ! To this day I can scarcely think of it without my blood running cold. But it was our baptism unto the sacred cause for which we were that day taking our lives in our hands. I often think that in that first experience of battle boys crystallized into men. I recall the sentiment of Col. Ryerson when, not long afterward, he presented us with our colors, he said that " Men who could go through that heart of fire were true heroes." And the truth of this sentiment was proven when, twenty-six years ago to-day, our gallant boy-colonel led his Quaker regiment into the battle of Salem Church. And I do believe that it experienced a severer test even, when, after our time was out, we marched over those ill-fated pontoons, anticipating nothing but disaster ; smarting with a sense of injustice, and yet loving our brave leader, our country, and our honor as soldiers, more than we loved our personal rights and our safety ; and I assure you, Col. Grubb, that I do not believe there was ever a time when your men were in better morale, or when they would have ventured farther or done more under your leadership, than they were ready to do when they stood face to face with a victorious foe, instead of being at their peaceful homes, as they had a right to be. Surely you had a proof of this when your boys, having returned home, cheerfully and enthusiastically followed you to the defence of Pennsylvania when the same powerful foe had invaded her borders ; a service which you know, sir, the other regiments in rendezvous at Beverly at the same time flatly refused to render. But they hadn't a brave boy-colonel to adore and follow to the death, as it was our fortune to have. While we were paying our respects for the last time to our old friend Gen. Lee on his side of the Rappahannock I did not hear a murmur, though we stood all night upon our arms, while the sappers and miners were throwing up a line of rifle-pits ; and when, after two or three days, the order came to return to Beverly, we marched back over that pontoon bridge with a light step and proud hearts that beat high with the consciousness of having done true soldiers' duty to the end : and I doubt if ever a commander returned from the front prouder of his boys than did our young colonel whose example had done so much to infuse into our hearts the spirit of the patriot soldier. And that must have been a glad day to him, indeed, when the citizens and the great men of Burlington County came together to do honor to the regiment which had come back from the war with bronzed faces and depleted ranks, and stronger characters and a glorious name. The only drawback to the complete enjoyment of that occasion was the sad memory of the graves so many of our brave boys filled, both at home and in that south-land where we had, most of us, experienced the first real trials of life.

But I doubt whether there was ever a time when our dear commander felt prouder of his boys, or happier in their devotion, than on the 13th of December, 1888, when those same boys, with the old Yahoo spirit unabated, broke ranks before the door of his beautiful home and almost rushed into his arms in their glad joy to behold again, not only the old face and form, but the same old hat and uniform that they followed into battle on December 13th, 1862 and May 3d, 1863.

And to-day, dear Col. Grubb, we come again, to renew our devotion to you our leader and to our country in whose sacred cause you led us so well.

The years have been speeding apace since those stirring days in which we learned to honor you ; the gray hairs have been gathering to us, as to you ; many of us are fathers of boys as old as we were when you led us ; we have seen many changes in life ; we have fought many of its hard battles, but as we gather about you to-day we are conscious that no change has been wrought in our attachment to, and honor for, yourself. During all the years since we parted with you at Beverly we have cherished only pride and affection for you.

We desire to congratulate you on the prosperity of which we have abundant evidence about us ; on the good name which you have preserved so well ; on the positions of honor and influence which you deservedly hold and have held ; and loyally and heartily do we wish you God-speed for the future ; and may it be the happy pride of the old Twenty-third soon to see its gallant commander at the head of the government of the State of New Jersey ; and when your inauguration day shall come, you may certainly count upon a strong and enthusiastic " YAHOO " BODY-GUARD.

On motion, a vote of thanks was given Corporal Donaldson for his very able and interesting address.

The meeting then adjourned to the lawn, where ample provision had been made to satisfy the appetite of all present. After this the members of the society were massed on the beautiful bank near the river and photographed, all presenting pleasant countenances, showing they were well pleased with their day's visit to this Re-union.

CAPT. GROBLER

CAPT. CARR

CAPT. KIRKBRIDE

ORIGINAL OFFICERS WITH SKETCHES.

The following were the original commissioned officers of the Twenty-third Regiment :

Colonel, John S. Cox ; Lieut. Colonel, George C. Brown ; Major, Alfred Thompson ; Adjutant, William G. Winans ; Surgeon, William Cook ; Assistant Surgeons, David G. Hetzel, Robert W. Elmer ; Quartermaster, Abel H. Nichols ; Chaplain, William T. Abbott. Company A, Captain Francis W. Milnor ; First Lieut., Charles Sibley ; Second Lieut., Edward Riggs. Company B, Captain Francis H. Higgins ; First Lieut., Samuel E. Branin ; Second Lieut., Lewis Ayres ; Company C, Captain Samuel Carr ; First Lieut., Henry C. Risdon ; Second Lieut., George W. Severs ; Company D, Captain Reading Newbold ; First Lieut., David R. Newbold ; Second Lieut., Charles H. McIntyre ; Company E, Captain Augustus Grobler ; First Lieut., Isaac Shinn ; Second Lieut., Alfred C. Seeds ; Company F, Captain Samuel R. Smith ; First Lieut., James S. Budd ; Second Lieut., Elwood H. Kirkbride ; Company G, Captain Joseph R. Ridgway ; First Lieut., Jacob Perkins ; Second Lieut., William H. Stokes ; Company H, Captain Henry A. Parmentier ; First Lieut., Leonard H. Ashley ; Second Lieut., Samuel W. Downs.

The following is a list of the original officers who resigned before the regiment was mustered out :

Colonel John S. Cox, Lieut. Colonel George C. Brown, Major Alfred Thompson, Adjutant William C. Winans, Surgeon William

Cook; Company A, Second Lieut. Edward Riggs; Company B, Captain Francis H. Higgins, Second Lieut. Lewis Ayres; Company D, Second Lieut. Charles H. McIntyre; Company E, Captain Augustus Grobler, First Lieut. Isaac Shinn, Second Lieut. Alfred C. Seeds; Company G, First Lieut. Jacob Perkins, Second Lieut. William H. Stokes; Company H, Captain Henry A. McCabe, First Lieut. David S. Root, Second Lieut. James Carter; Company I, Second Lieut. William Frazer.

Promotions from enlisted men:

Private F. L. Taylor of Company A, to be Captain; Private Samuel Brown, Jr. of Company A, to be First Lieut.; Sergeants George W. Arbuckle of Company K, Edward L. Dobbins of Company I, William Holman of Company I, Benjamin R. Haines of Company E, Charles H. Southwick, Nichol F. Smith and Augustus A. Messeroll of Company B, to be Second Lieutenants.

Sergeants John F. McKee of Company A, and Samuel L. Wright of Company C, to be First Lieutenants.

Promotions from other regiments, with their original rank:

Captain Henry O. Ryerson of Company B, Second Regiment, to be Colonel. Second Lieut. E. Burd Grubb of Company C, Third Regiment, to be Colonel. First Lieut. Paul R. Hambrick of Company A, First Regiment, to be Captain. Lieut. Henry A. Coursen of Company I, Seventh Regiment, to be Captain. Sergeant S. H. McCarter of Company B, Second Regiment, to be Second Lieut. Corporal R. J. Wilson of Company B, Second Regiment, to be Second Lieut. Private H. H. Goldsmith of Company B, Third Regiment, to be Second Lieut.

Owing to the scarcity of mustering officers the regiment was detained at Beverly from the first until the thirteenth of September, when they were mustered into the United States service by Captain Royal; yet during the period of this detention for muster, to the honor of the organization be it recorded, not one case of desertion marred its fair fame, and during the time the regiment remained in the service but four cases of desertion are recorded against it; these men, it afterwards appeared, were misled by the bad counsel of some men of older organizations in the brigade, and who accompanied them in their mad flight from duty, the whole party, undergoing incredible hardships and exposure, were finally captured and in punishment sent to the Dry Tortugas.

SKETCH OF THE COLONELS OF THE REGIMENT.

Col. John S. Cox was mustered as colonel of the regiment September 13th, 1862, and resigned October 31st of the same year, never having seen any service. He was succeeded by Lieut. Col. Henry O. Ryerson of the Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

Col. Henry Ogden Ryerson was the son of the late Thomas C. Ryerson, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of New Jersey from 1834 until 1838. On the mother's as well as father's side he was descended from loyal stock. His father's ancestors were connected with the Society of Friends, and yet had their representative in the Quartermaster's Department of the Revolutionary Army. His father did his tour of duty in the militia in the War of 1812, and the records of the State Historical Society sufficiently show the part taken by his mother's family in the War of the Revolution, her father and uncles being field or staff officers in the Continental Army, and her grandfather one of New Jersey's Committee of Safety. Her uncle, Aaron Ogden, was aid to Lafayette, and a trusted agent of Washington in connection with the affair of Andre and Arnold.

Col. Ryerson was born at Newton, Sussex County, January 10th, 1826, and was admitted to the bar in 1847. From that time until 1855 he lived in Chicago, California and the Sandwich Islands; returning to New Jersey he practiced his profession until the breaking out of the rebellion. While engaged in some law business in Jersey City he saw the first call for volunteers, and at once on his return to his home in his native town, volunteered as a private.

Elected captain by his comrades, he led them to the field as Company B of the gallant Second Regiment. At the battle of Gaines' Mill, while in command of six companies of his regiment, having been promoted to major, he was severely wounded while in the act of rallying his men, falling with the colors in his hands. He was left on the field, where he remained ten days, three of them without food. Water, however, was plenty in the swamp, for one of his comrades paid a Confederate soldier ten dollars to drag him out on dry ground. That ten days' exposure, and three weeks in a Richmond prison, gave him a fever, which aggravated his wound so that he was not able to return to his regiment until October first. With one wound still open he rejoined his regiment as lieutenant-colonel in time to take part in the engagement at Crampton's Pass.

Just as the army began to move towards Manassas, and on its arrival at Crampton's Pass, October 31st, 1862, he was placed by Gen. Torbert over the Twenty-third Regiment, and received a regular commission as colonel on the 12th of the following month. With this regiment he participated in the first battle of Fredericksburg, where his bravery and coolness under fire will never be forgotten by those who had the honor to serve under him. In this engagement, while seated on his horse, a solid shot that had nearly spent its force, passed in line with him, so close that his life was saved only by his throwing himself flat on his horse's neck, the shot falling with a dull thump in the bluff behind him. Reaching down from his saddle he recovered his cap, without dismounting, which had fallen from his head in his effort to save his life, and then sat as composedly in his saddle as though nothing unusual had happened. On account of the short time the Twenty-third had to serve, he applied for and received command of the Tenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, with which he served with marked distinction. Being severely wounded in the head by a minnie ball in the battle of the Wilderness, May 6th, 1864, he fell into the hands of the enemy, and died at Locust Grove Hospital, Virginia, May 12th.

Col. Ryerson's courage was conspicuous on all occasions. He never saw personal danger, and yet was scrupulously careful of his men in action, just as he was in camp, because he felt that he was responsible for their welfare, both to his superiors and to his country's cause.

Col. E. Burd Grubb was born in the city of Burlington in the year 1842, and graduated from the college in that city in 1860. At the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Third New Jersey Volunteers, for three years, and was mustered into the United States service as a second lieutenant of his company, June 13th, 1861, and afterwards as first lieutenant of Company D, Nov. 8th, 1861.

This regiment formed a part of what is known as the First New Jersey Brigade, noted for its bravery on every field of battle from Bull Run to Appomattox. As early as July, '61, we find this young officer attracting attention for his devotion to duty. The "New York Times" of that date, under the head of an article entitled "The stuff that some volunteer officers are made of," reads as follows:

"During the battle of Bull Run, the Third Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers, Col. Taylor, was ordered up the road, with orders to protect some ammunition at Burk's Station. They went readily forward, longing to get into the fight, whose distant thundering reached their ears. Among these it was necessary to detail some men to protect the ammunition; and, to his regret, spoiling his hopes of the battle, Lieut. Edward B. Grubb, of Company C, Third Regiment, with a corporal and twenty-five men, was entrusted with this duty. The lieutenant is a boy--not, I think, yet of age—a son of E. B. Grubb, Esq., of Burlington, and an alumnus of Burlington College. He disposed his men, set out his pickets, and leaving the corporal in charge, 'turned in' for a little rest. The corporal awoke his lieutenant with the news, 'the enemy are upon us.' In a moment he was out. Twenty of his men fell in with the troops that rushed by. He stood there, not knowing what it meant, and determined to stand his ground come what would. The corporal and five men stayed with him. For more than an hour the rout rushed by, still they stood firm. A little while after came his regiment under the lieutenant-colonel, who ordered him to fall in with them in their retreat, as the army was routed and the enemy in full pursuit. 'No,' said Lieut. Grubb, 'Col. Taylor put me here, and nobody but Col. Taylor shall take me away.' And for a half hour more he stayed, every moment looking for death. But the colonel remembered him, and came to him; and not until he had destroyed every particle of ammunition, did he leave his post, under the orders of his commanding officer. By this gallant action 30,000 ball cartridges were lost to the enemy, and much other valuable ammunition, which would have fallen into their hands, was destroyed. But best of all, it is an instance of highest courage—strict obedience, with no thought of personal result—which deserves and has received notice and commendation. I am very sure that, when occasion offers, we shall hear the best things of Lieut. Grubb."

He received his first baptismal fire under the leadership of that one-armed hero and patriot, Gen. Phil. Kearney. During one of the battles on the Peninsula, Foster, in his "New Jersey and the Rebellion," says:

"A large force of rebels came out of the woods in our front, with six pieces of artillery and immediately opened fire. The position of the New Jersey troops at this time was a perilous one, being directly between the fire of the rebels and that of the main body of our forces. The regiments of the New Jersey Brigade were quickly formed into line of battle, and Gen. Taylor immediately sent one of his aids, Lieut. E. B. Grubb, up the road to Gen. Slocum's headquarters for orders. The road which the aid was compelled to take was directly in range of the rebel batteries, and the ride was consequently a most perilous one; but he dashed on, reaching his destination safely. Not finding Gen. Slocum, he was compelled to return; but orders being imperatively necessary, he was again obliged to repeat his ride through that rain of shot and shell. With death staring him in the face at every bound of his horse, the gallant aid again went back, and this time succeeded in getting orders."

Col. Grubb served, not without distinction, on the staff of Gen. Taylor, being in all the engagements of the Peninsular campaign in which that officer participated, and was at his side at the second battle of Bull Run when he received his death wound. On Gen. Torbert's assuming command of the brigade he was still retained on his staff, in which position he served with honor until he was sent to the Twenty-third as major to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Major Thompson, and was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy on the resignation of Lieut.-Col. Brown and to be colonel of the regiment vice Col. H. O. Ryerson, transferred to the Tenth New Jersey.

Col. Grubb was the most popular officer of the regiment: while being a strict disciplinarian, almost bordering in some particulars on the martinet, he still managed to so ingratiate himself in the affections of his command that duty soon became with all a work of love. In both the battles in which the regiment bore a not undistinguished part, he showed conspicuous courage, not asking his men to face any danger he was unwilling to share. It was due to him that the right of the regiment, when thrown into confusion by the terrible fire to which it was subjected, was rallied and led into the thickest of the combat at Fredericksburg. At Chancellorsville, always at the head of his regiment, mounted until his horse was shot from under him, then on foot, still animating the men and leading them on—himself the furthest in the front, and the last to leave the field—seeming to bear a charmed life, he moved from point to point, calm and cool, the men nerved to daring by his example, until further exertion no longer availed.

After the return of the regiment, and their final muster out, the men came flocking back to Beverly, on account of a rumor that Col. Grubb was raising the Thirty-fourth Regiment. He was appointed in command of Post No. 2, Beverly, and afterwards raised the Thirty-seventh New Jersey, served with it before Petersburg, and was rewarded by the commission of "Brigadier General by brevet," for gallant conduct.

EDGEWATER PARK, December 14th, 1889.

To Captain E. H. KIRKBRIDE :

My Dear Captain—I send you herewith the original order issued after the "Battle of Salem Church." This is the original paper written by me, which I took off the bulletin board (a tree) myself, a few days after the fight, and has been in my possession ever since. You can understand that I prize it beyond pearls and rubies. I suggest that you have it photographed, as I have no doubt that many of the men would like to see it. The date it was issued was May 6th. Do not let the order get away from you, and please return it as soon as you are through with it.

Very sincerely,

E. BURD GRUBB.

Ref^t Order No - 69

The commanding officer desires to compliment the regiment, upon the gallantly displayed by it on Sunday last, and to return his thanks to the officers, who so nobly seconded him on that occasion. It is true, that - overwhelmed by a vastly superior force - out flanked, outnumbered, and, in imminent danger of capture you were forced to retire from the unequal contest. but, that you fought bravely, the loss of nearly a third of ~~the~~ your number, among them some of our best and bravest, sadly testifies - With a tear to the memory of our noble dead - and with the most heart felt sympathy for those who have been wounded I cannot but feel well assured, that, if it shall be again our fortune to be tried in battle you will not forget that you are men, and Serjeants

REGIMENTAL ORDER No. 69 :

The commanding officer desires to compliment the regiment upon the gallantry displayed by it on Sunday last, and to return his thanks to the officers who so nobly seconded him on that occasion. It is true that, overwhelmed by a vastly superior force—out-flanked, outnumbered, and in imminent danger of capture, you were forced to retire from the unequal contest—but, that you fought bravely, the loss of nearly a third of your numbers, among them some of our best and bravest, sadly testify. With a tear to the memory of our noble dead, and with the most heartfelt sympathies for those who have been wounded, I cannot but feel well assured that if it shall be again our fortune to be tried in battle you will not forget that you are men, and Jersey men.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.
OFFICE OF ADJUTANT GENERAL.

TRENTON, JAN. 23, 1890.

CAPT. E. H. KIRKBRIDE,
Medford, N. J.

SIR:—In reply to yours of 29th ultimo for Casualty lists of the Twenty-third Regiment New Jersey Infantry Volunteers in the Civil War I made call therefor on the Adjutant General U. S. Army who has kindly furnished them to me and I inclose you herewith verbatim copies of the lists as received; but I would direct your attention to the notes I have made thereon which gives the record of the soldier as shown by the muster out rolls. Quite a number of men who are reported on the lists as “killed” were afterward discharged from the service; this is easily explained, however. These men may have been wounded and in the excitement of battle were thought to have been killed.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM S. STRYKER,
Adjutant General.

E. BURD GRUBB, Col. Twenty-third N. J. V.

These reports of casualties were made out and sent to the Adjutant General's office at Washington from the field, and were as correct as the different commanding officers of companies could furnish at the time. Some who are reported as being killed turned up all right afterward, and were mustered out with the regiment, while others who are reported as wounded or missing, were found to have been killed, or died from their wounds in some hospital, a correct record of which will be found opposite each name in the original muster as published in this book.
